Mr. Gerard Badorrek
Chief Financial Officer
U.S. General Services Administration
1800 F Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20405

Dear Mr. Badorrek:

We respectfully write to request information about the General Services Administration's plans to address so-called "use it or lose it" spending at the end of the federal fiscal year. Historically, federal agencies increase spending during the fourth quarter of the fiscal year.¹ Although not a new phenomenon,² use it or lose it spending can lead to waste and abuse of taxpayer dollars. The Committee has previously raised concerns about the potential for waste and abuse the practice presents.³

Last fiscal year, agencies spent a total of $11.1 billion in the final week of the fiscal year⁴—almost five times higher than the average weekly spending during the rest of the year.⁵ Further, research suggests that "spending that originates in the last week of the fiscal year has 2.3 to 5.6 times higher odds of having a lower quality score."⁶ According to a recent report, with only limited time left in the current fiscal year, eight of the top ten highest-spending federal agencies have not used as much as 40 percent of their budgets.⁷ Some observers have raised concerns that this year's annual spending binge could be the biggest yet.⁸

¹ U.S. Gov't Accountability Office, PSAD-80-67, Government Agencies Need Effective Planning to Curb Unnecessary Year-End Spending (1980), available at <https://www.gao.gov/products/PSAD-80-67> (citing that one of the rationales offered by agency personnel for year-end spending surges is "an implicit philosophy that all available funds must be spent before the end of the fiscal year . . .").
